

Restaurants On River Street

Places to eat on River Street are plentiful, with two dozen or so restaurants, pubs and cafés offering riverfront dining, whether casual or upscale. In the evenings and on weekends, River Street restaurants are often bustling, with live music and outdoor dining adding to the ambience.

Seafood restaurants on River Street are abundant, and most places will offer some sort of seafood dish. You can choose from southern favorites such as fried or steamed crab, oysters or shrimp, or other more classically presented American or international seafood dishes.

The primary appeal of most of the restaurants on River Street is their waterfront location. Most establishments cater largely to tourists, so don't expect to find the best food in the city here, or the lowest prices. For most, however, the river views and option to dine outdoors outweigh the downsides.

!ID is required for all alcohol purchases. By law, alcohol cannot be served on Sundays before 12:30pm. Please check hours and other details directly with the establishment(s) you plan to visit before traveling.
